Investment Outlook & Strategy

The global markets should continue to be volatile with downward bias moving into the summer months. The market attention continues to focus on economic data around the world particularly the US. The data trends have been moderate but positive, giving an increasing clarity to the global economic health. Sentiment is somewhat affected by the numerous geo-political tensions.

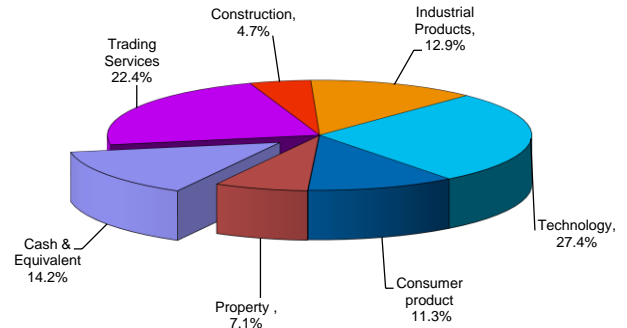

The domestic market should trend along with the regional and global markets. It continues to have its eyes peeled on the development on China's economic conditions. Now that the market is trading at historical highs, downside risk appears higher at this juncture.

Nevertheless, we still believe that the medium to long term view of the market still remains intact as the overall global economic and capital market conditions/outlook now continue to improve albeit at a different pace. In addition, equity will be relatively a better asset class to invest in compared to fixed income on the back of flush liquidity and eventual rising rate environment. This is so if compared to last 12-16 months ago and they are better prepared with anti-recessionary policies in place. Therefore, long term investment strategy should reflect such conditions rather than allow our sentiments and emotions over-rule the logical thought process. As a result of this, reinvestment, rebalancing and/or switching activities will focus towards; (a) specific stocks for outperformance (b) bombed-out over-looked, under-research or ignored companies with cheap valuation against its historical band/peers, (c) good companies which are currently at the wrong market cycle but will benefit moving forward due to its inflection point of structural or induced recovery, and (d) tactical position in specific thematic plays, other than selective defensive-resilient led stocks.
